Teaching reflection #3

October 21st/22 8:30am

This week I was asked to prepare a lesson introducing debating topics and language used in debates to create valid arguments. I think I did better with my time management and keeping students busy. I incorporated at least three different activities during the lesson to keep them engaged and I like leaving my last 20 minutes to half hour open for group or partner work to fully focus on talking to one another to improve language skills. I'm happy with how the lesson went, students seemed happy and engaged. I still didn't give myself much time to prepare something as I'm super indecisive about what activities to choose or if I do choose some, I'll rethink it because I don't think it adapts well with what I'm teaching. I tend to second guess myself I suppose. I am happy with what I was able to put together though in such short time. Again, my time management needs to improve.
